ABSTRACT

Gender and the societal expectations that women face daily have been extensively studied (Butler 2006; De Beauvoir 2015; Kruks 1992). The studies have revealed that women face gender-double-bind in politics (Engber 2020) and media (Debray et al. 2024). Dominant ideologies and the construction of the ‘Self’ and the ‘Other’ are realised through the discussion of female politicians in media (Herschinger 2012). In this MA thesis, I investigate the recent period marked by presidential elections and the war in Ukraine in media political discourse regarding the most influential female politicians of the two selected countries. It is aimed to analyse with what recurrent themes female politicians are associated in the recent media articles from Lithuania and the U.S., and what role conceptual metaphor has in the construction of gender-double-bind dilemma. To achieve this aim, 80 articles from four different media outlets – CBS News, Fox News, LRT, and Lrytas, encompassing the time period of 2021-2024 were analysed within the theoretical framework of Critical Discourse Analysis with the main focus on thematic analysis and its framing by metaphors. The analysis has revealed that female politicians face a gender-double-bind dilemma in the mainstream Lithuanian and the U.S. media representations, where they are expected to lead and be responsible for their countries’ actions regarding national and international issues, yet at times, they are discussed within the frame of traditional femininity.

INTRODUCTION

Women have fought for many years to ensure gender equality. Society has moved towards a broader understanding of women's roles in social and political spheres. Gender stereotypes have evolved over the decades; the perceptions of women's capability in the labour force and intelligence have risen (Santoniccolo et al. 2023, 4). A female politician is no longer a surprising career choice. There have been female political leaders all around the globe, holding high positions of power such as Prime minister and President. Although female political leadership is evident, female political leaders still face biased repercussions from the media. The media often focuses on their family relations, and criticises them for their femininity, or lack thereof.

There have been numerous studies conducted on the gender-double-bind, revealing that women face conflicting societal expectations (Butler 2006; De Beauvoir 2015; Kruks 1992). The media samples in this research will be collected from the period of 2-3 years, involving the current times of crisis. Some claim that female political leaders are not capable of handling serious decisions because of their emotional nature (Engber 2020, 102). Therefore, it can be speculated that during times of crisis, the media tends to focus more on the nurturing and maternal qualities of female leaders. Such representation in the media might reinforce the perception that women are less capable of performing certain roles in politics.

The research aim is to analyse how female political leaders are discursively represented in news media (political) discourse, and to what extent the gender-double-bind dilemma is ideologically enacted. To achieve the above, the following research objectives were raised:

1. To analyse how female political leaders are discursively represented in the news media.
2. To identify the recurrent themes associated with female leadership.
3. To investigate how gender-double-bind dilemma (double standards) is discursively enacted.
4. To overview the role of metaphor in gender-double-bind dilemma representation.
5. To compare the reoccurring similarities and differences across the data sets.

The outline of the paper is as follows. The thesis comprises six parts, namely, an introduction, a theoretical overview, a methodology, an empirical analysis, conclusions, and a summary. The summary is provided in both Lithuanian and English languages, and a list of references and data sources is included at the end. Additionally, the appendix contains a table with examples that were analysed.

The literature review encompasses the general principles of Critical Discourse Analysis, the discourse of news, specifically the gender-double-bind dilemma in news media discourse, and critical metaphor analysis with a focus on ideological metaphor use. Background information on the chosen politicians is also included. The second part presents data characteristics. In the third chapter, the results collected from these articles are discussed, and the most prominent examples of metaphor use are analysed in more detail by comparing the media outlets. The thesis concludes with a summary of the research findings. The following section will elaborate on the key concepts of the theoretical framework that form the basis for this thesis.

1. LITERATURE REVIEW

This section deals with the main principles of the theoretical framework of the research. It consists of four main sections, which present and discuss critical discourse analysis, critical metaphor analysis, gender issues, and metaphor use in political discourse. The fourth section provides background information about the selected political leaders from Lithuania and the U.S., namely Dalia Grybauskaitė, Ingrida Šimonytė, Hillary Clinton, and Kamala Harris.

1.1. Critical Discourse Studies

The discourse theory project was initially developed by Michel Foucault in the 1970s (Angermuller et al. 2014, 98). Later, Norman Fairclough defined discourse as a sum of three elements involving social practice, text, and discursal practice (Fairclough 1995, 74). Critical Discourse Analysis (CDA) lacks a unified framework (van Dijk 2001, 353) and involves various interdisciplinary practices, which treat language as a form of social practice. To practically apply CDA, Fairclough has developed a framework consisting of three stages (cited in Snowdon & Karlsson 2021):

- Language analysis which determines the target group as active or passive.
- Identification of the intended audience and its relation to the author.
- Interpretation and analysis of social practice to recognise the relationship between ideology and text.

Regarding ideology, Norman Fairclough (1995, vii–viii) extensively discusses the relationship between sociocultural change, discourse, and ideological premises in professional practices. He claims that ideologies are not found in the texts themselves; they arise from the interpretations of those texts and their social setting (ibid., 80). Critical Discourse Analysis provides a framework to understand how media texts reinforce certain ideologies and biases. Overall, it studies the way inequality and power abuse are enacted through language in the political sphere (Van Dijk 2001, 352). According to Antonio Reyes, CDA analyses the construction of the “Other,” which is a product of ideology in society (2011).

One of the recent studies investigating gender ideologies in politics has been conducted by Carolin Debray et al. (2024), where images, texts, and media reports were investigated. By looking into the discursive strategies that the media sources apply, the scholars found out that media relies on dominant ideologies and therefore the portrayal of female politicians is biased; they are held to the male standard (Debray et al. 2024, 67). Ideology is employed in the process of creating identities, which works through “inclusion” and “exclusion,” which create the dichotomy of the “Self” and the “Other” (Herschinger 2012, 67). For instance, another study by Schneider and Bos (2014) has determined that female politicians are often viewed as a “subgroup” of women (Schneider & Bos 2014, 253). Moreover, some scholars state that the “Other” is usually created regarding immigrants, although, women are also often targeted by far-right political parties (Pettersson et al. 2022, 4).

Consequently, language often functions as a tool for legitimisation and delegitimisation practices in politics. Francesco Screti (2013, 212) describes legitimisation as “discursively creating and transmitting a positive image of the Self; delegitimizing means discursively creating and transmitting a negative image of the Other”. For instance, Antonio Reyes delves deeper into the process of legitimisation and deligitimisation in politics (2011). The author discusses the discourse strategies that politicians themselves employ to persuade constituents (Reyes 2011). The author distinguishes separate categories of legitimisation, for instance, legitimisation through emotions, such as sympathy or fear (ibid.).

The discursive strategies are often employed to victimise or demonise (Reyes 2011, 789–790). According to Wodak (2015, 2), slogans, speeches, posters, and other media are instrumentalised in producing and reproducing dominant ideology. Fairclough (1995, 5) claims that spoken and written discourse conforms to the dominant ideologies and relations of power employed in news media production. The study by Ross and Rivers (2017, 1) provides insights into how legitimisation is achieved by prescribing positive values and deligitimisation occurs through sarcasm. The study investigated memes, a contemporary phenomenon, which are used to mock political candidates (Ross & Rivers 2017, 1) with sarcasm and metaphors as a part of figurative language (Skalicky 2018). Specifically, metaphoric expressions are valued for their encoded conceptual information (ibid.). The paragraphs below will discuss the role of metaphor in media political discourse.

1.2. Critical Metaphor Analysis

Delving deeper into the topic, metaphor can be described as a discourse structure and a mental model, which includes ideological implications (Arcimaviciene & Jonaitiene 2015, 346). In politics, metaphors are coined and employed to legitimise democracy and delegitimise, for instance, terrorism (Hellin 2013, 302). Therefore, metaphor is viewed as an essential part of conceptualising reality and producing Us versus Them binary oppositions (Arcimaviciene & Jonaitiene 2015, 347). Metaphoric expressions represent mappings between source and target domains (Musolff 2006, 24), the basic meaning of which derives from embodied experiences. The pioneers of the Conceptual Metaphor Theory Lakoff and Johnson (1980/2003) claim that abstract concepts are generally perceived through more specific conceptual experience (Lakoff and Johnson 2003, 116). The authors illustrate that with the conceptual metaphor of LOVE IS A JOURNEY (Lakoff and Johnson 2003, 117), where more specific experiential domain of journey is mapped onto the more abstract domain (ibid.).

In political discourse, some scholars argue that the most popular conceptualisation is realised via the “game” (Brugman et al. 2019, 43) and “war” frames (Lapka 2021, 85) that have shared features of competitiveness. Another reason why metaphors are ubiquitous in political discourse is their narrative simplicity. Mio, for instance, claims that people are limited in their understanding of all kinds of information; they tend to focus on the topics they are interested in (1997, 117). The use of metaphor can evoke interest in an issue through a “part-to-whole” relation (ibid.). Through the analysis of metaphoric utterances, researchers can understand why women are represented differently in media (Arcimaviciene & Jonaitiene 2015, 345).

The study of metaphors used by male and female politicians was conducted by Arcimavičiienė (2023). The study included the analysis of metaphors in the first lockdown speeches of the COVID-19 pandemic. The study concluded that males and females use similar conceptual metaphors, yet ideologically, they serve different purposes (Arcimaviciene 2023, 15). For instance, the WAR metaphor in male politicians' discourse is employed to mobilise the nation against the pandemic, while in female politicians' discourse, the metaphor stands for the general concept of 'fight' without the confrontational divide between the nation and virus-as-the-enemy (ibid.). Overall, the empathetic language use is more evident in female politicians' discourse (ibid.)

In political discourse, metaphors are also used to persuade (Lapka 2021, 85) the audience of politicians' right intentions. The study by Burgers, Brugman, and Vis (2019) investigates the use of conceptual metaphors for promoting ideas that are in line with liberal and conservative conservatives (ibid., 44). One of the reasons why metaphors can vary is explained by cognitive processes, therefore, "various contextual factors constantly influence the way we conceptualize the world" (Kövecses 2014, 23). The scholars (Brugman et al. 2019, 44) give the example conceptualising economy in terms of weather that influences people to believe that the problems related to it are outside of people's control. The study concludes that in certain situations the use of metaphors can make a difference in how political discourse impacts its audience (ibid., 60).

1.3. Gender Double Bind Dilemma in Discourse/News Media Discourse

Gender is a topic that is especially widespread nowadays. Media and various political movements promote gender equality (Santonico et al. 2023, 2). Butler (2016) emphasises the division between gender and sex and argues that the two terms cannot be used interchangeably. Sex is the term describing biology, especially in the context of hormones, anatomy, etc., while gender is approached as a psychological construct shaped by society (West & Zimmerman 1987, 125). Judith Butler draws on Lévi Strauss's concepts and describes sex as the "raw" material and gender as its "consequence", therefore, this binary relationship is responsible for specific power dynamics within culture (2006, 50). Consequently, gender is perceived as the rationale and outcome of various social arrangements for both males and females (West & Zimmerman 1987, 126). The social impact of gender perceptions is seen in the division of labour, and social expectations that are prescribed in society based on gender (ibid., 128). Therefore, it is fair to say that biological sex emerges as a significant socio-demographic factor, which forms perceptions of competence (Bligh et al. 2010, 827). Such ideas were debunked by several reports in the media that highlighted the fact that female leaders managed to deal better with the COVID-19 crisis rather than male political leaders (Debray et al. 2024, 53). Nevertheless, competent women are often perceived as emotionally cold, but not able to handle stressful situations, while men are perceived to be competent enough to lead, particularly in times of uncertainty (Bligh et al. 2010, 827). The following sections explain the contradictions in women's roles.

Cambridge Dictionary Online (2024) explains double-bind as a situation in which regardless of the position a person takes, they cannot avoid displeasing outcomes. From a psychological point of view, women in politics are perceived as not competent enough to assume leadership, yet lacking attributes stereotypically linked to women (Schneider & Bos 2014, 259). Some scholars argue that female candidates are often associated with the ability to handle social welfare issues better than men, yet they are perceived as less competent in matters related to defence, crime, and the economy (Jones 2016, 628). Most female candidates face double-bind stereotypes if their campaigns do not conform to stereotypical gender roles (Costa 2020, 1). For instance, traditional women tend to be represented in a more positive light (Huber & Baena 2022, 243). Therefore, female politicians often highlight their maternal qualities. Scholars discuss the fact that the former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton often speaks about her grandchildren, Senator Kirsten Gillibrand often highlights her role as a mother, and Vice President Kamala Harris tends to positively discuss her relationship with her stepchildren (Winfrey & Carlin 2023, 141). The emphasis on maternal qualities can sometimes work for or against female politicians in certain situations.

Furthermore, scholars have observed that the media often emphasises the physical appearance of women (Huber & Baena 2022, 241). For instance, even female scientists attract the media's attention regarding their looks (ibid.). In politics, females tend to be held to a higher standard than males (Costa 2020, 1). Some scholars argue that the sexist treatment of female politicians is decreasing; however, studies show that female politicians are still considered to be unlikeable, physically weak, and unfit to be leaders (Winfrey & Carlin 2023, 134). The examples above illustrate that female politicians find themselves balancing between femininity and masculinity. Such situations often result in a double-bind; they are not feminine enough to be likable and not masculine enough to lead (ibid., 141).

1.4. Background Information About Female Political Leaders

Nowadays, with the rising equality, it is no longer surprising to see women holding powerful positions. In Lithuania's political history, there has been one female president and two female Prime Ministers. In the political history of the United States, there have been three female presidential candidates. The following subsections will provide an overview of the most influential female political leaders of the two selected countries, focusing on their political work and impact on society.

1.4.1. Dalia Grybauskaitė

Grybauskaitė (b. 1956) is a former Finance Minister, economist, and the former president of the Republic of Lithuania. She became president in 2009 and was re-elected in 2014, becoming the first woman to hold the presidential post in Lithuania (Deloy 2014). After her first term, she gained the title of the 'best-elected president' in Lithuania's history (ibid.).

After becoming president in 2009, Dalia Grybauskaitė introduced changes in Lithuania's decision-making processes regarding foreign policy affairs (Janeliūnas 2021). She encouraged politicians to reevaluate relations with Russia and Belarus. During her second term, she expressed support for Donald Trump and strongly criticised Russia's behaviour on the international scale (ibid.). Grybauskaitė initiated the relationship between Lithuania and the Nordic countries, setting the Nordic countries as examples of democracy to establish closer ties between Lithuania and the West (ibid.). During her presidency, she served as the head of the Council of Women World Leaders (2014–2019) (President Dalia Grybauskaitė 2023). Since 2020, she has been working for the United Nations, preparing documents and recommendations to ensure international financial transparency (Istorinė Lietuvos Respublikos Prezidentūra Kaune 2024).

Her leadership style has been extensively analysed in academia. One of the scholars who have discussed the style of female political leadership is Hannah Engber. In her research, she claims that female politicians are subjected to greater scrutiny for public approval compared to male politicians (2020). Engber writes that Dalia Grybauskaitė is an example of resilience within the political sphere (ibid.). Engber further draws parallels between Grybauskaitė and Margaret Thatcher regarding their outspokenness. The media has given Grybauskaitė the titles of "Steel Magnolia of the Baltics" and the "Iron Lady," reflecting her tough demeanour regarding Lithuania's relationship with Russia. Furthermore, Grybauskaitė has compared Vladimir Putin's political regime to the governance styles of Josef Stalin and Adolf Hitler (Engber 2020, 107).

Another study, focusing specifically on metaphorical analysis, examined the leadership discourse of many world leaders, including Dalia Grybauskaitė. Conducted by Liudmila Arcimavičienė and Vida Jonaitienė (2015), the research investigated the use of metaphors in Grybauskaitė's and other politicians' speeches. The scholars discovered that from 2010 to 2012, the former president employed 42 metaphors, involving thematic domains of strength/unity, journey, and personification (Arcimavičienė & Jonaitienė 2015). They argue that Grybauskaitė's strategic use of metaphors evokes notions of strength, assertiveness, and authoritative power, where unity is deemed essential for political and social capacity (Arcimavičienė & Jonaitienė 2015, 350–356). Overall, the scholarly investigations of her leadership style align with the notion that Dalia Grybauskaitė is a leader widely recognised for her outspokenness and strong political decisions.

1.4.2. Ingrida Šimonytė

Ingrida Šimonytė (b. 1974) is the current Prime Minister of Lithuania, who came to power in 2020. She was a candidate in the presidential election of 2019. Šimonytė is the second woman to hold the position of Prime Minister, following Kazimira Prunskienė, who served as Prime Minister at the time when Lithuania regained its independence (Deloy 2020).

Šimonytė's career includes holding high-ranking positions in public administration (Eriksonas 2019). Her political career began when she joined the Ministry of Finances in 1997 (Visuotinė Lietuvių Enciklopedija 2024). She served as the head of the Tax Credit Office in 2002 and later became the Minister of Finance in 2009 (ibid.). In 2022, she became a member of The Homeland Union – Lithuanian Christian Democrats party (ibid.). The outgoing government consisted of 13 men and 1 woman; therefore, her goal was to establish a coalition with equal representation (Deloy 2020). She did not become president in 2019, as she lost her presidential candidacy to Gitanas Nausėda.

Ingrida Šimonytė's diplomatic strategies have been discussed in academia. In her recent study, Amber Brittain-Hale, for instance, analyses Šimonytė's communication online during the Russo-Ukrainian war era (Brittain-Hale 2024). In scholarly discourse, Šimonytė is considered to be a prominent European politician, elected to be the voice of millions of people (ibid.). Furthermore, the analysis proves that Šimonytė's broadcasted messages serve as examples of collaboration, empathy, and a commitment to resolve the conflict without violence (Brittain-Hale 2024, 174).

Moreover, Ingrida Šimonytė held a leadership position and was responsible for managing the COVID-19 crisis. Scholars have noted the small number of women serving as top chief executives during the pandemic (Piscopo & Och 2021). Nevertheless, her decision against utilising the Sputnik V vaccine in Lithuania was interpreted as Lithuania's suspicion toward Russia's actions and motives (Kojala 2021). Rasa Bortkevičiūtė describes Šimonytė's leadership as “transformational” (Bortkevičiūtė 2023, 7). Among women leaders in the Global North, Šimonytė is known for her responsibility in policy-making that kept COVID-19 deaths per one hundred thousand people under one hundred (Piscopo & Och 2021, 6). Therefore, her leadership during the COVID-19 pandemic is viewed positively by many.

1.4.3. Hillary Clinton

Hillary Rodham Clinton (b. 1947) was born in Illinois and was the eldest child of parents who owned a business (Caroli, Britannica 2024). Her parents valued hard work and encouraged her to choose the career that she wanted the most (whitehouse.gov 2024). Clinton's career in politics and personal life has been heavily discussed in the media. Her political success, particularly in relation to her gender, has been an important topic in academia (Uscinski & Goren 2011; J. J. Jones 2016; J. Lee & J. Lim 2016).

In 2000, she ran for the New York Senate seat and was elected by the majority of voters (National Women's History Museum 2024). In 2006, she was re-elected to the Senate, and in 2008, she ran for the presidential campaign against Barack Obama (Caroli, Britannica 2024). Scholars have considered Hillary Clinton to be the right candidate for the presidential post (Jones 2016). Despite that, Obama was inaugurated as president in 2009.

Hillary Clinton's political career has attracted attention both in the media and scholarly discourse. Many have criticised her for her lack of femininity and trustworthiness, particularly in the context of losing to Donald Trump in the presidential election (Engber 2020, 103). Noor Ghazal Aswad describes Clinton as an established politician who unexpectedly lost to a billionaire reality TV star (Aswad 2018, 56). The outcomes of the 2008 and 2016 elections raised interest in her political campaigns. Her personality traits had been previously examined in the 2008 presidential election.

The findings suggest that Hillary Clinton lacked charisma, which may be considered a weakness in a leader (Bligh et al.). The media coverage of the 2016 election similarly suggests that the lack of charisma was one of the contributing factors to Clinton's defeat (Aswad 2018, 57). Overall, Hillary Clinton's performance in the 2016 election was evaluated negatively even by her supporters (Lau et al. 2019, 424). In both elections, Clinton lacked the qualities necessary to meet the demands of the general public.

A study regarding her style of speech was conducted by Jennifer J. Jones (2016). The study relies on sociology, psychology, and linguistics to examine the phenomenon of the "double bind" evident in Hillary Clinton's speech. The analysis focused on function words and the emotional elements within linguistic styles, which are seldom investigated in scholarly discourse (Jones 2016, 631). The study suggests that Hillary Clinton conformed her speech toward a more masculine style during her active engagement in politics.

1.4.4. Kamala Harris

Harris (b. 1964) is the first woman, the first Black American, and the first South Asian American to hold the position of Vice President of the United States (The White House 2024). As a member of the Democratic Party, she is known for her significant contributions to women's rights, healthcare, and LGBT+ rights.

Her professional career includes serving as a deputy district attorney in Oakland throughout the 90s, where she dealt with serious cases involving drugs, gang violence, and sexual abuse (McNamee, Britannica 2024). She became district attorney in 2004 and, in 2010, made history as the first female and the first African American to be elected attorney general of California (ibid.). As a prosecutor, Harris argued that the majority of committed crimes are non-violent, but the way the system treats such offenses wastes resources (Chettiar & Waldman 2015). She initiated programmes to reduce violence, prosecute violent criminals, identify the root causes of youth offenders' criminal behaviour, and provide support to victims (ibid.).

Moreover, she refused to defend Proposition 8, which banned same-sex marriages, and therefore contributed to its overturn in 2013 (McNamee, Britannica 2024). In 2015, she ran for the U.S. Senate seat and won. She has also advocated for the improvement of maternal health care, infrastructure, and opportunities for small businesses (The White House 2024). After becoming

Vice President in 2021, she advocated for women's freedom in decisions about their bodies, and the safety concerning gun violence, and established alliances with leaders from 150 countries (The White House 2024). Additionally, she played an important role in the landmark Inflation Reduction Act, which addresses the climate crisis (ibid.).

Harris's leadership has been analysed by many. Scholars note that she breaks stereotypes and challenges the patriarchy within the government itself (Locke & Joseph 2021). She often promotes herself as a part of the general public. According to Hanan A. Amaireh, the inclusivity aspect plays a key role in female politicians' discourse (Amaireh 2022, 1767). It preaches a shared identity between the public and the politician herself (ibid.). Moreover, Harris's discourse in the media addresses the challenges that women face in the United States (ibid.). Nevertheless, the evaluations of her work have not always been positive. Harris has encountered backlash for her positive view on the death penalty and her defensive stance on police officers accused of misconduct (Locke & Joseph 2021, 454).

2. DATA AND METHODS

This study aims to primarily distinguish the recurrent themes in the mainstream media articles and subsequently analyse the metaphoric expressions within the recurrent themes.

To achieve the aim, a total number of 80 articles were collected and analysed within the period of 2021-2024. First, the articles were selected by random sampling, while searching for the politician's name in the search bar. In the second round, each of the articles was qualified whether they focus on the selected political leader. More details are provided in the Table 1 below.

Table 1. Data Characteristics

Female leader	Media source	Time span	Word count
1. Kamala Harris	CBS News	2023-2024	5258
	FOX News	2021-2024	5763
2. Hillary Clinton	CBS News	2021-2024	5125
	FOX News	2021-2024	7763
3. Ingrida Šimonytė	LRT	2021-2024	6851
	Lrytas	2024	4731
4. Dalia Grybauskaitė	LRT	2022-2024	4720
	Lrytas	2023	6692
Total			46,903

As shown in Table 1, 80 articles with the overall coverage of 46,903 words have been chosen for investigating recurring themes and metaphorical expressions: 40 articles come from the US and 40 articles come from the Lithuanian sources. The selection criteria for the data collection are as follows:

- 1) Reference to the female leader. The chosen articles had to include female politician's name.
- 2) Time period. The articles were chosen during the time period of four years of 2021-2024. The period of 2-3 years is marked by important and recent events in society, such as presidential elections, the imprint of COVID-19, and the war in Ukraine.
- 3) Media bias. The sources were investigated using an online media bias check engine (www.mediabiasfactcheck.com). The sources were separated into two main categories: least biased or leaning towards political left (CBS News and LRT) and sources leaning towards political right (Fox News and Lrytas).

- 4) The political leaders' nationality. Two Lithuanian and two U.S. female leaders.
- 5) Political status. Both Lithuanian and U.S. female political leaders, who are actively engaged in politics and currently hold position in power; and two female political leaders who stepped down from active politics (i.e., Kamala Harris and Ingrida Šimonytė with a currently active position in power Hillary Clinton and Dalia Grybauskaitė with a formerly active position in power).

The study relies on Critical Discourse Analysis (CDA), specifically drawing on Fairclough's (1995, as cited in Qiu 2013) three-dimensional model, identifying and interpreting recurrent themes in the primary stage of the coding procedure. Fairclough identifies three main steps that must be taken to effectively analyse discourse:

1. Text analysis (the language description).
2. Discourse practice (interpretation of the text).
3. Sociocultural analysis (social reasoning).

The Metaphor Identification Procedure (MIP), as developed by the Pragglejaz Group (2007), was procedurally implemented in the second step of the analysis. According to MIP (2007), the following steps are taken to identify the metaphorical nature of the unit and/or expression:

1. The contextual meaning for each lexical unit must be identified.
2. The basic contemporary meaning in other contexts must be identified.
3. The lexical unit can be marked as metaphorical if the two meanings are different but are compatible in the context of use.

Drawing upon the Conceptual Metaphor Theory by Lakoff and Johnson (1980/2013), the formula is 'A IS B' was applied in reference to the conceptual source and target domains. For instance, in the conceptual metaphor of ARGUMENT IS A FIGHT" (Lakoff & Johnson 2013, 86), A represents the target domain of ARGUMENT, while B represents the source domain of FIGHT.

The expressions containing metaphorical meanings were selected manually and coded in Excel. For clarification of the basic meaning Cambridge Dictionary Online (2024) and online dictionary of etymology were used.

The statistical data such as raw frequency and metaphorical density was used for the purposes of comparison of the recurrent themes and metaphor use in the U.S. and Lithuanian mainstream media in reference to four female politicians. The following section presents the findings of the research and the detailed discussion.

3. RESEARCH FINDINGS

The analysis of 80 articles (40 from the U.S. and 40 from Lithuania) resulted in 922 thematic threads where female politicians were referenced. In the CBS News, Kamala Harris was referenced the most frequently at 72%, while Hillary Clinton was referenced at a significantly less rate of 28%. Regarding the Lithuanian media, Ingrida Šimonytė, who is currently Prime Minister of the Lithuanian government, was targeted on LRT at the range of 61% and 55% in the Lrytas articles, By comparison, the references to Dalia Grybauskaitė are lower though without significant differences in the coverage range (i.e., 39% on LRT and 45% on Lrytas). Table 2 below summarises the trend of female politicians’ media coverage across the media sources.

Table 2. Research Findings

Female political leaders	Media sources
	CBS News	Fox News	LRT	Lrytas
Kamala Harris	138 (72%)	112 (46%)
Hillary Clinton	73 (28%)	138 (54%)
Ingrida Šimonytė			169 (61%)	103 (55%)
Dalia Grybauskaitė			103 (39%)	86 (45%)
	461 (10,814 words)		461 (9,138 words)
Total	922 (19,952 words)

The results above illustrate the initial hypothesis that the representation of politicians aligns with the media source’s political views and the politicians’ active/passive role in politics. Regarding the selected U.S. media sources, Kamala Harris was referenced quite extensively in both media outlets due to the upcoming presidential elections in the U.S. It is not surprising that Kamala Harris, being the representative of the Democratic party, was thoroughly referenced by CBS News, which is a left-centre media outlet, that prioritises the coverage of material related to liberal political views (mediabiasfactcheck.com).

Furthermore, Hillary Clinton, who is known as a representative of the Democratic party, was covered significantly less by CBS News (28%) than Kamala Harris. The reason for such an outcome might be the fact that she is a former secretary of state and no longer holds an active power position in politics. Surprisingly, she was covered more by the Fox News, the source known for its political bias, right-wing political views, and a lack of critique regarding conservative politicians (mediabiasfactcheck.com). The reason for such results could be the fact that Hillary Clinton is known to openly criticise her former 2016 presidential election rival Donald Trump, who is an active member of politics and a member of the Republican party (political right). Regarding Kamala Harris and Fox News, she is mentioned in 46% of the analysed material. Kamala Harris is the Vice-President of the current U.S. President Joe Biden, who is running against Donald Trump in the 2024 presidential election, therefore, she is covered quite extensively in both media outlets.

The results of the Lithuanian media indicate that Ingrida Šimonytė is covered quite extensively in both media sources. The politician is a candidate for the presidential office in 2024. According to the Media Bias Fact Check, LRT is the least biased Lithuanian source, leaning slightly to the left (mediabiasfactcheck.com); therefore, it is not surprising that Ingrida Šimonytė, as the head of the incumbent government and the member of the Lithuanian Christian Democrats’ party, is covered more on LRT (61%) rather than Lrytas (55%).

Moreover, the coverage of Dalia Grybauskaitė, unlike the media coverage of Ingrida Šimonytė, does not exceed 50% in both media sources. The former president no longer actively participates in politics yet is outspoken about the war in Ukraine. She is known for her extensive critique regarding Vladimir Putin’s actions (Engber 2020); therefore, it is not surprising that she is still frequently referenced by the media. The content analysis of the collected data is described in the following subsections.

3.1. Recurrent Themes Associated with Female Political Leaders

Out of 922 instances, 3 major themes were identified in each country’s media coverage regarding their references to female political leaders. The themes are summarised in Table 3 below.

Table 3. Recurrent Themes

Regarding Kamala Harris, as observed in Table 3, the theme of ‘Abortion rights’ is the most prominent in both media sources, which is not surprising as the Vice-President is known for being an advocate of women’s rights (McNamee, Britannica 2024). With the recent overturn of the Roe v. Wade abortion regulation act in 2022 (Britannica 2024), the theme is mentioned twice more frequently on the CBS News (a liberal source) than on the Fox News. Moreover, the CBS News focuses on Kamala Harris’s various visits during the presidential election campaign. By contrast, the Fox News focuses on sensitive issues related to Kamala Harris such as her “Anecdote,” and migration issues that are of concern to right-wing political parties, specifically the former president and presidential election candidate Donald Trump (Bolter et al., migrationpolicy.org 2022).

Regarding Hillary Clinton, the CBS News tend mostly to focus on lighter topics such as Clinton’s book and TV series. It is worth noting that the news outlet wrote about Clinton’s support regarding Sana Marin’s scandal and the war in Ukraine was prominent. The Fox News deal with the themes related to Donald Trump such as the presidential election and Trump’s alleged “hotline to Russia”. She is finally related with the sensitive topics such as human rights and transgender issues.

The theme of election was one the most recurrent themes in the LRT articles with the 2022 referring to Ingrida Šimonytė’s candidacy in the party election and more recent articles from 2024 focusing on the upcoming presidential election. Ingrida Šimonytė, being the former Minister of Finance, was mentioned several times regarding budget issues. Due to the current war in Ukraine, the Lithuanian media tends to focus on the theme of war with Lrytas articles focusing mostly on the military aid (35 instances). Within that context, Ingrida Šimonytė’s campaign slogan in association with Vladimir Putin was also mentioned. Finally, the Lrytas articles extensively highlighted the farmers’ protest in Lithuania.

The former President Dalia Grybauskaitė was mentioned several times, regarding the war in Ukraine. In the LRT articles, Grybauskaitė’s name was dominating in the topics related to the war directly, the overall relationship with Russia, and a more light-hearted theme regarding an event of a national holiday. In the Lrytas data set, the thematic references to Dalia Grybauskaitė included the upcoming presidential election in Lithuania, the war in Ukraine, and her visit to Taiwan, which was heavily criticised by President Gitanas Nausėda.

In the second coding stage, the most recurrent metaphorical expressions and their representative source domains were identified and compared across the collected media texts. The analysis of the metaphoric expressions aims at identifying any gendered uses that place women politicians into a gender-double-bind (Lim 2009). Consequently, the relationship between the metaphor and the recurrent theme will be discussed in the context of gender-double-bind dilemma. The overview of the source domains and their frequency is provided in Table 4 below.

Table 4. Metaphors in the Collected Data

	SOURCE DOMAINS (ME)	No. of words	No. of ME	Metaphorical Density (MD)
CBS News	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Personal relationship (13) • War (12) • Journey (4) • Service (2) • Emotion (2) • Motion (2) 	4755	47	1 ME per 101 words
Fox News	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Body (10) • War (9) • Motion (10) • Food (5) • Crime (3) 	6059	91	1 ME per 52 words
Total		10814	136

LRT	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Journey (4) • Personal relationship (3) • War (3) • Body (3) • Theatre (2) • Motion (2) • Personification (2) • Game (2) 	5227	31	1 ME per 169 words
Lrytas	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Nature (5) • Threat (5) • Body (5) • Conflict (2) • Journey (2) 	3911	34	1 ME per 115 words
Total		9138	65

As seen in Table 4, the difference between the number of words is not very significant, yet it can be argued that the texts in U.S. media are more metaphorical, especially in the Fox News (1 ME per 52 words). In the CBS there are fewer metaphoric expressions than in its counterpart - Fox News; however, the CBS News references to the female political leaders are more metaphorically marked. In the Lithuanian media, the use of metaphors is similarly spread across both outlets, although the Lrytas references to the female political leaders are less metaphorical (1 ME per 169 words). The general trend of fewer metaphoric expressions per entire data set is explained by the fact that only metaphoric expressions in references to female political leaders were considered for the analysis.

As the current study aims to investigate media biases regarding female politicians' representation, it is hypothesised that metaphors will represent shared attitudes and opinions about the female political leadership. As observed in Table 4 above, 11 source domains were the most frequent in the CBS and FOX News articles, while 13 source domains were evoked in the Lithuanian data set. Only 9 most recurrent source domains were selected for a more detailed analysis, (see Table 4 and Figure 1/Figure 2 below) as follows PERSONAL RELATIONSHIP, WAR, BODY, MOTION, and FOOD in the U.S. media data set and JOURNEY, BODY, THREAT, and NATURE in its Lithuanian counterpart. The findings also point out to the overlapping source domains across the two data sets which are JOURNEY, PERSONAL RELATIONSHIP, WAR, MOTION and BODY.

The source domains were selected and grouped from both countries' media according to the similarities in their epistemic correspondences:

- WAR & THREAT – both source domains are connected to violence and have negative connotations. THREAT is the primal feeling and an initial stage of WAR.
- BODY & MOTION – the two source domains are related to human body as a mechanism; overall the concept of BODY and its ability to MOVE in SPACE.
- NATURE & JOURNEY – both source domains are connected by the idea of change. NATURE has its cycle and JOURNEY is an act that brings change.
- PERSONAL RELATIONSHIP & FOOD – both source domains are related to culture. FOOD is a part of culture, while consuming FOOD is both a cultural and PERSONAL act.

Due to the limited length of the thesis, only the grouped source domains will be analysed in more detail and their specific examples will be provided in the following subsections of the thesis.

3.1.1. The Metaphors of WAR & THREAT

As mentioned previously, WAR is the source domain that is recurrent in both countries' media, while the source domain of THREAT is quite extensively used in the Lithuanian media. Both source domains involve negative emotions, as illustrated in the examples below.

According to Lakoff (2013), we can understand complex systems using metaphor. Metaphor, as a system, does not hold any morality or immorality, therefore it is a useful tool in understanding complex or abstract situations, such as war (ibid., 5). Lakoff states that metaphor is used to understand international relations and war (Lakoff 2013). Therefore, in times of war or conflict, certain political rhetoric emerges, where the narrative differentiates between what it means to be male or female (Aggestam et al. 2018). For instance, in the example below, Kamala Harris is described as a "hostess" having a meeting with a "battleground state". She is prescribed feminine qualities yet dealing with the matters of ELECTION conceptualised as WAR.

- (1) A weekend meeting hosted by Vice President Kamala Harris with battleground state governors included no conversation about removing President Biden from the Democratic Party ticket, but plenty of talk about how to discredit special counsel Robert Hur's rep (CBS News, 2024).

In this example, there is a combined use of two types of traits: combativeness in politics and entertainment in social relationships, with the latter specifically attributed to Kamala Harris. Another example below illustrates a different situation, where Kamala Harris is associated with active agency in political decision-making, i.e. 'targeting' the migrant crisis.

- (2) Vice President Harris this week returned to focusing on targeting what the administration believes are the "root causes" of the migrant crisis at the southern border, announcing $1 billion in additional funding and a new initiative to direct money to Central America (Fox News, 2023).

Other examples represent the metaphors used to comment on the ongoing war in Ukraine and its consequences. Lakoff's (2013) idea that metaphors can offer moral assessment of complex reality. In this case, Hillary Clinton is indirectly cited where she antagonises Russia-as-the-Other by using the WAR metaphor and thus expressing her moral stance on Russia's agency in the on-going conflict.

- (3) Former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton says the trafficking of women and girls is "sadly exploding in Ukraine" and neighboring countries after Russia's invasion (CBS News, 2022).

This example clearly portrays Hillary Clinton as an assertive politician who can make harsh judgments on the ongoing issues.

The assertive stance is also displayed in the Lithuanian media, where Dalia Grybauskaitė is referenced in the context of her assessment of the war in Ukraine. In (4), the female political leader is directly cited, where she ideologically confronts the collective Self (Ukraine and Europe) with the collective Other (Vladimir Putin and Alexander Lukashenka). By doing so, Dalia Grybauskaitė legitimises the collective Self through its opposition to the collective Other (Screti, 2013, 212).

- (4) Paklausta, kaip situacija gali klostytis toliau, D. Grybauskaitė sakė, jog yra akivaizdu, kad kova už Ukrainą taip pat yra kova už Europą: „Tai jau yra visos Europos karas. Jei nesustabdysime Putino ir Lukašenkos Ukrainoje, jie ateis prie mūsų sienų ir jie pradės puolimą ‘the fight for Europe’ (LRT, 2022).

As mentioned in the theoretical framework, war is the most frequently used domain to explain politics (Lapka 2021, 85). The following cases involve the metaphor of THREAT, which is used in the theme of Presidential election in both, Lithuania and the U.S. In previous studies of political discourse analysis, it is observed that the same WAR metaphor can have different ideological meanings when used by male and female political leaders. For example, female politicians referred to the WAR metaphor through its generalised aspect of fighting without evoking the aggression scenario (Arcimaviciene 2023). In the examples below, the female politicians are described in their discussion of foreign policy and international conflicts by mainly referring to the concept of THREAT. This metaphor is traditionally used in political discourse for a clear stance of the political leader to refer to the ideological divisions between groups or countries. Thus, the female leaders with these examples are positioned in the narrative of confrontational rhetoric, where Dalia Grybauskaitė (4, 6) and Hillary Clinton play an active role (3, 5):

- (5) Former Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Clinton warned this weekend that former President Trump will try to withdraw the U.S. from NATO if he wins re-election in November (Fox News, 2024).
- (6) D. Grybauskaitės biuro atsakas Tikina, kad G. Nausėda neturi panašumų su apie prezidento rinkimus svarstančiu I. Vėgele Prieš prezidento rinkimus – daugybė mįslių: matytų grėsmę net D. Grybauskaitei, prakalbo ir apie svarbią partijų vadovų pareigą Kinijos valdžia itin griežtai reaguoja į oficialius kitų valstybių atstovų apsilankymus Taivane ‘threat’ (Lrytas, 2023).

Both female politicians discuss political issues by evoking the concept of THREAT that implies their active role in confronting problems. The following section will deal with metaphors related to the source domains of body, and motion.

3.1.2. Metaphors of BODY & MOTION

Women politicians are widely discussed using the Bodily Senses and Motion source domains. In many instances, the representation of Kamala Harris was constructed in the contexts of public polls and surveys, where the conceptual metaphor of UNDERSTANDING IS SEEING played a primary role. It should be noted that by using both metaphorical expressions of “holding a net negative view” and “holding a positive view”. In the example below, Kamala Harris is described in the passive role of being assessed, her agency is thus determined by the public view.

- (7) In a November survey, 29% of registered voters said they held a net negative view of Harris, compared to 52% who said they held a net positive view of her (Fox News, 2024).

In the example (8), the negative assessment of the former Lithuanian President Dalia Grybauskaitė is provided by the representatives of the incumbent government through the use of the adjective “kandi”, which is associated with the bodily action of biting. By using this metaphor, the bodily senses are mapped on the target domain of more negative assessment:

- (8) Dėl D. Grybauskaitės kelionės – kandi G. Nausėdos patarėjo replika ‘abrasive’ (Lrytas, 2023).

In (9) below, the former president is cited by employing the metaphor of MOTION. In the citation, she personifies Lithuania and its ability to withstand Russian propaganda. The use of this metaphorical expression follows the same pattern of conformational rhetoric assigned to Dalia Grybauskaitė. Such behaviour in political discourse is generally associated with traditional masculinity:

- (9) Buvusi Lietuvos prezidentė Dalia Grybauskaitė teigia, kad Lietuva išmoko atsispirti Rusijos propagandai ir išgyventi priešų pašonėje ‘learnt to withstand’ (LRT, 2024).

In the examples below, Dalia Grybauskaitė’s criticism is metaphorically assigned the sensory source domain of “bitterness”. Metaphorical adjectives such as “sweet” and “bitter”, tend to encode the brain with ‘emotion’ more than non-metaphorical adjectives (Thibodeau et al. 2017, 289). Therefore, in this case, the use of ‘bitter’ expresses negative emotions on Grybauskaitė’s behalf aimed towards the political elite. This expresses her power status and recognised legitimacy of the leader, who can take a critical stance towards the elite. The concept of “bitterness” is frequently contextualised within the framing of traditional femininity, at the same time within this context the female leader is shown as the one who contests the status quo:

The above-mentioned source domain of MOTION is another conceptual domain that is frequently evoked in the references to female political leaders. According to Lakoff and Johnson (1980/2003), the source domain of MOTION is closely related to time and, more specifically, represents movement in time (ibid., 42). The example (12) below illustrates Kamala Harris’s active election campaigning through the MOTION metaphor, while (13) illustrates Dalia Grybauskaitė’s confrontational attitudes to Russia as an aggressor, e.g.:

(12) It will be Harris' fourth stop a month after her nationwide tour kicked off on Jan. 22 in Waukesha County, Wisconsin (CBS News, 2024).

(13) Nei mes jį sukėlėme, nei mes jį aštriname, o, jeigu atsitraukinėjime ir leisime tokiems agresoriams lipti ant galvos, jie užlips ant visų mūsų, pakeis visą tvarką ir galų gale turėsime labai blogas pasekmes, su kuriomis nesutvarkysime, – dėstė D. Grybauskaitė ‘backed off; get on’ (LRT, 2022).

In (12), Kamala Harris’s election experience is described in terms of the MOTION metaphor that generally signifies change and on-going action. By contrast, in (13) the MOTION source domain is used to ascertain Dalia Grybauskaitė’s critical view of Russia as a “trespasser”. This example solidifies Grybauskaitė’s image of being direct and harsh in her political assessments.

3.1.3. Metaphors of NATURE & JOURNEY

People are influenced by metaphors because they evoke emotion (Thibodeau et al. 2017, 289), and NATURE is one of those source domains that affects how the received information is processed. The examples below illustrate the NATURE metaphor that represent extremely powerful emotions:

(14) Lietuvos viešojoje erdvėje kilo sąmyšis, kurį gesinti turėjo ir pati premjerė, ir Lenkijos premjeras Donaldas Tuskas ‘put down the fire’ (Lrytas, 2024).

- (15) Premjerės pasakymai įžiebė diskusijas viešojoje erdvėje – Vyriausybė sulaukė kritikos dėl to, kad dar nėra išsprendusi šių teisinių formalumų ‘sparked’ (Lrytas, 2024).
- (16) Pastarieji dveji metai parodė, kad mūsų klaidos, mūsų silpnybės yra tai, kodėl Ukrainoje vis dar liejamas kraujas“, – nurodė ji ‘blood is pouring’ (Lrytas, 2023)
- (17) Internetas ošia: I. Šimonytė rinkimų kampanijai pasirinko V. Putino naudotą šūkį ‘internet rustles’ (Lrytas, 2024).
- (18) Politikė taip pat nurodė, kad neketina pretenduoti tapti eurokomisare, „nepaisant karštai verdančios diskusijos“, „Man Lietuvoj tvoros žydi“, – nurodė premjerė ‘fences bloom’ (LRT, 2023).

The examples above showcase how women face certain expectations in politics. If female politicians exhibit traits that are not associated with femininity, such as for instance assertiveness, they are punished for it (Costa 2020). In this case, the assertive stance of the Lithuanian Prime Minister was met with backlash from the public. The word 'įžiebė' (sparked) denotes an intense discussion associated with intense emotions. As mentioned in the theoretical overview, female politicians are often considered to be not competent enough and incapable of handling serious matters because of their emotional nature (Engber 2020, 102). It can thus be argued such metaphorical expressions representing the source domain of NATURE can foreground the societal bias of traditional femininity guided by uncontrolled emotion.

The uncontrolled emotion is also expressed in the example (17). In this case, the slogan that the Prime Minister chose to use called out strong reactions online. The verb “ošia” indicates that the Prime Minister provoked “a storm” on the internet. As it was mentioned in the theoretical framework, conceptualising certain matters in terms of weather denotes a lack of control (Brugman et al. 2019, 44). Despite that, in example (18), the Prime Minister says that “the fences are blooming” for her in Lithuania, meaning that she claims not to be affected by the negative public’s opinion.

Moreover, Dalia Grybauskaitė employs the metaphor of NATURE speaking about matters related to war in Ukraine. She claims that “the blood in Ukraine is still pouring like water”. Negative emotions and societal problems are also discussed in the U.S. media. The role of the negative emotions as conveyed by the NATURE metaphor can be also recognised in the overturn of the pro-abortion act is described as a natural phenomenon associated with the dissolution of materials over time. The metaphor can imply Kamala Harris’s lack of control over the overturn of the Roe v. Wade decision, e.g.:

Another example related to the source domain of NATURE indicates that the problems in the country are deep and not easy to get rid of, yet her government is doing everything they can and already seeing positive outcomes, e.g.:

(20) Our root causes strategy and these investments represent a long term development effort, but we are already beginning to see positive trends," she said on Monday (Fox News, 2023).

Another example of the NATURE metaphor is water-related and is used in reference to Kamala Harris' ratings e.g.:

(21) The favorability rating for Vice President Kamala Harris continues to sink nine months ahead of the 2024 presidential election in November (Fox News, 2024).

Another source domain that was used extensively in reference to female political leaders is that of JOURNEY. The metaphor of JOURNEY is generally viewed as one of the most frequent conceptualisations of political events, with their focus on change and progress (Moragas-Fernández et al. 2018, 521). In the examples below, the Lithuanian politicians are described as taking 'steps' or 'steering the wheel' and thus being actively engaged in politics:

(24) LRT.lt primena, kad iki 2009 metų iškilmingus priėmimus rengdavo prezidentas Valdas Adamkus su pirmąja šalies ponia Alma Adamkiene, tačiau ši tradicija nutrūko, kai ekonominio sunkmečio laikotarpiu valstybės vairą perėmė prezidentė Dalia Grybauskaitė, atsisakiusi rengti priėmimus tada, kai dauguma šalies žmonių susiduria su finansiniais sunkumais 'took the steering wheel' (LRT, 2022).

As seen in the examples above, the JOURNEY metaphor is used to foreground female political leaders' agency in politics, which is associated with competitiveness (in 22) and active political role (in 23 and 24). In (24), Dalia Grybauskaitė is described not only as an active agent but as the one who stood her ground and refused to waste resources during the economically challenging period. This use of the JOURNEY highlights the female leader's responsibility and resistance.

By contrast, in reference to Hillary Clinton's reference in the Fox News, this metaphor can have negative connotations, e.g.:

(25) Clinton's comments are a stark departure from what she once described as the "highest priority." (Fox News, 2022)

Clinton is referenced only by her second name. Moreover, "stark" implies darkness. Such representation of Clinton's rhetoric implies that she can radically change her views, therefore, she cannot be trusted.

To sum up, it can be argued that female politicians' actions are often associated with the source domain of NATURE, which can denote intense emotions that cannot always be controlled. Nevertheless, they are also expected to lead their countries and governments despite challenges, as is denoted using the JOURNEY metaphor. The following section will deal with metaphors of PERSONAL RELATIONSHIP and FOOD.

3.1.4. Metaphors of PERSONAL RELATIONSHIP & FOOD

The source domains of PERSONAL RELATIONSHIP and FOOD are extensively used in the U.S. media sources, though their examples are also found in the Lithuanian media in reference to the female leaders. Both source domains involve personal lives and domestic spheres, the examples of which are presented and discussed below.

(26) Vice President Harris and governors dish on immigration, abortion, special counsel — but not on dumping Biden (CBS News, 2024).

(27) Kamala Harris roasted for Thanksgiving pic: 'Is that a gas stove?' (Fox News, 2023).

In the examples, the use of the verbs "dish" and "roast for" as well as direct reference to "gas stove" raise associations in line with the domesticated environment. In previous studies it has been shown how references to domestic space, specifically a woman's kitchen (see example 27) can contribute to enacting traditional gender roles (Lim 2009). In addition, Kamala Harris is criticised, which can imply that her feminine traits are not empowering her but contrarily diminishing her agency. Another example of such criticism is observed in the following example:

(28) Vice President Kamala Harris attempts to explain AI in latest word salad gaffe: 'Kind of a fancy thing' (Fox News, 2023).

The metaphor suggests that Harris is incompetent, she is trying to say as much as possible yet without any valuable exchange of ideas. According to Costa (2020), female politicians receive more negative evaluation regarding their communication style rather than their male colleagues.

A similar trend is observed in the Lithuanian media, where a well-known Lithuanian proverb “A spoon of tar spoils a barrel of honey” is metaphorically used in the context of the presidential election. The role of proverbs in displaying metaphorical language and social attitudes has been widely discussed by linguists (Mieder & Dundes 1994, 56). In this case, the proverb is used to compare two presidential candidates and the consequences regarding the election outcome. In the metaphorical meaning, Dalia Grybauskaitė’s political career is compared to a barrel of honey, while her loss to Gitanas Nausėda in the presidential election is viewed as a reputation issue for her political career.

(29) Jeigu ji eina ir pralaimi tuos rinkimus G.Nausėdai, kas irgi yra pakankamai realu, politinės karjeros pabaiga gaunasi šiek tiek su šaukšteliu deguto statinėje medaus, kas gali būti tai, ko D.Grybauskaitė ne visiškai trokšta ‘with a teaspoon of tar in a barrel of honey’ (Lrytas, 2023).

It can be argued that references to food can display the attempts of displaying the characteristic of gender biases towards female political leaders. In a similar way, the feminine qualities are prescribed to Kamala Harris, when she is in the role of a hostess. As mentioned previously, gender associations signify social expectations of traditionally perceived gender norms (West & Zimmerman 1987). The examples below illustrate how the source domain of PERSONAL RELATIONSHIP is used in the political context:

(30) It was described by people familiar with the exchange as an intimate listening session, where governors who have overseen their large states during the COVID-19 pandemic, won tough reelection fights and could one day face off against the vice president in (CBS News, 2024).

(31) Many voters think President Biden is too old to run in 2024, but Vice President Kamala Harris refuses to engage in speculation about what would happen if President Biden were unable to stay in the race (CBS News, 2023).

(32) I.Šimonytė teigė, kad nuomonių yra įvairių ir tai nėra jokia paslaptis ‘is not a secret’ (LRT, 2023).

Words such as “intimate” and “engage” are used to describe Vice President’s actions in politics, which blurs the line between the public and the personal. Example (32) mentions “secrets” as a part of politics. In the following example below, Kamala Harris is described as not having a ‘cozy’ relationship with Joe Biden. It is interesting to note how the etymology of this word derives from

Scandinavian and refers to “a padded covering for a teapot to keep the heat in,” (etymonline.com). The etymological and contextual cues point out to the overarching theme of personal relationship between Joe Biden and Kamala Harris, which can potentially undermine the latter’s agency in the political decision-making.

(33) "In terms of her popularity, that's a big question and it could be a big risk. It just depends on where she shows up, when she shows up, and what she has to say, because she and Biden don't exactly have a cozy relationship," she noted (Fox News, 2023).

Another example, involving the theme of personal relationship' comes from the Lithuanian media source. In the example, the Prime Minister of Lithuania is described as not being able to continue her relationship with the party. Such examples illustrate how political leadership transitions from the private to the public sphere (Lim 2009, 255), which blurs the line between the two and can give rise to certain biases. The themes the politicians are mentioned in deal with serious public matters yet are described with words typically associated with private spheres.

(34) Anot politologės, dėl užimamų pareigų I. Šimonytė tešti tokio santykio su partija ilgai negalės 'to continue the relationship' (LRT, 2022).

In (35), there is another instance of such use realised by the Lithuania verb “viešinti”. According to the etymology dictionary of the Lithuanian language (etimologija.baltnexus.lt), the word ‘viešinti/viešėti’ derives from Balto-Slavic and means to be a guest at somebody’s house. In the example below, the Prime Minister’s visit to Bucharest can affect the politician’s agency and portray her role in the process as less significant, e.g.:

(35) Šiomis dienomis Bukarešte viešinti ministrė pirmininkė Ingrida Šimonytė trečiadienį susitiko su Rumunijos prezidentu Klausu Iohannisu ir Suomijos premjeru Petteriu Orpo 'staying with' (Lrytas, 2024).

The examples above have demonstrated that woman politicians and their qualities regarding their political careers and their opinions are metaphorically described in terms of food or personal relationships. Such representation positions female politicians as leaning towards the domestic rather than the public sphere, which can be an indicator of gender-double-bind in media political discourse.

To summarise, the analysis of the metaphorical expressions in reference to female politicians has resulted in eight prevalent source domains that were recurrent in both the Lithuanian and the U.S. news mainstream media in the time period of four years from 2021 to 2024. The overlapping source domains represent the following semantic fields: WAR & THREAT, BODY & MOTION, NATURE & JOURNEY, PERSONAL RELATIONSHIP & FOOD.

The source domains of WAR, THREAT and JOURNEY were the most frequently realised. The source domains projecting female political leaders' agency within the media narrative can serve different purposes. They can be used to project female political leader's agency and confrontational tactics. Furthermore, female political leaders' agency is projected through the target domain of emotions structured through the source domain of BODY. The lack of political agency is realised through the source domains of FOOD and NATURE.

CONCLUSIONS

The analysis of the recurrent themes and metaphorical expressions regarding female politicians has led to the following conclusions.

In the 80 articles analysed, there was an equal number of references to female politicians in both Lithuanian and U.S. media sources (461). The media sources referenced the female politicians within the framework of their political views as well as the current status of the political leader. The themes associated with female politicians in the media sources are context-dependent. In the U.S. media, the most referenced themes were abortion rights, elections and migration. In the Lithuanian media, most female politicians were contextualised within the themes of elections, the war in Ukraine, and military aid. Therefore, female politicians' current political role also determined their referencing and description.

The representation of and references to both countries' female politicians can depend on the bias of the media source. The American media sources that are considered to be leaning towards political right, reference female politicians regarding sensitive issues, such as a joke by Kamala Harris, which was misunderstood, topics related to Donald Trump and Hillary Clinton, as well as transgender issues. The Lithuanian right-leaning source Lrytas, focused on Šimonytė's controversial slogan and President Naudėda's critique of Grybauskaitė's political visits. Yet, surprisingly, in both right-leaning sources, the representation of female politicians is less metaphorically marked.

The framing analysis of the recurrent themes resulted in contextually paired source domains: WAR & THREAT, BODY & MOTION, NATURE & JOURNEY, PERSONAL RELATIONSHIP & FOOD. The source domains of JOURNEY, PERSONAL RELATIONSHIP, WAR, and BODY were used the most in both countries' media sources. Additionally, the analysis has revealed that the U.S. media is more metaphorically loaded, especially the Fox News (1 ME per 52 words), while the Lithuanian media source that uses the least metaphors in reference to female political leaders is LRT (1 ME per 169 words).

The source domains of WAR & THREAT position female politicians as both active and passive political agents. By comparison, the source domains of BODY & MOTION project agency and emotional aspects of their political leadership. The source domain of NATURE emphasises their lack of control, while the JOURNEY metaphor denotes change and progress. The source domains of PERSONAL RELATIONS and FOOD provide an ambiguous assessment of how female political leaders are represented, though mainly the focus on the traditional femininity associated with the meanings of domesticated identity.

It can be claimed that the initial hypothesis was confirmed. The metaphors employed in the representation of female political leaders exemplify the double expectations regarding politicians' leadership. Additionally, the media representation of female politicians aligns with the source's media bias and the politicians' active/passive position in politics.

Due to the limited length of the research, the analysis encompassed the years 2021-2024 and four female politicians from two countries. The research is limited since more articles from more media outlets could have been analysed, encompassing a longer period of time in order to compare the representation of female political leaders throughout the years. Additionally, a Corpus-based approach could have been implemented.

Despite its limitations, this research has contributed to the fields of gender, political, and media studies, representing that gender-double-bind is a prevalent issue and its linguistic realisations point out the complexity of this issue. In the current times of uncertainty, ongoing wars, changing laws, and elections, female politicians are expected to lead their countries, simultaneously conforming to traditional gender roles. In further studies, more attention could be given to the changes regarding gender-double-bind realisations in political discourse over time, by including more countries and more female political leaders into the analysis.

SUMMARY

Female leadership is evident all around the globe with women holding power positions such as Prime minister or President. Yet to this day, female politicians face gendered stereotypes. For instance, female politicians are held to a higher standard and face sexist attitudes (Costa 2020). The study aims to analyse how female political leaders are discursively represented in the media (political) discourse, and to what extent gender-double-bind dilemma is ideologically enacted. To achieve the goal set above, the following research objectives were raised: (1) to analyse how are female political leaders discursively represented in the news media, (2) to identify the recurrent themes associated with female leaders, (3) to investigate how the gender-double-bind dilemma (double standards) discursively represented, (4) to overview the role of metaphor in gender-double-bind dilemma representation, (5) to compare the reoccurring similarities and differences the across the data set.

461 references to female politicians in the U.S. media sources and 461 references in the Lithuanian media sources were identified and analysed within the theoretical framework of Critical Discourse Analysis. The prevalent themes that were established across the data set are as follows: war, abortion rights, elections, and various visits. Media bias as well as the politician's active or passive role in politics contributed to the representation of female politicians. Moreover, the framing of the identified themes was metaphorically analysed and has resulted in the following source domains: WAR & THREAT; BODY & MOTION; NATURE & JOURNEY; and PERSONAL RELATIONSHIP & FOOD.

SANTRAUKA

Moterų lyderystė yra akivaizdi visame pasaulyje. Moterys užima tokias svarbias pozicijas kaip ministrė pirmininkė ar prezidentė. Tačiau iki šiol moterys politikės žiniasklaidoje yra vaizduojamos šališkai. Pavyzdžiui, žiniasklaida daugiausia dėmesio skiria jų išvaizdai, šeimyniniams santykiams, kritikuoja jas dėl jų moteriškumo ar jo trūkumo. Dėl šios priežasties šiame tyrime žiniasklaidos pavyzdžiai buvo paimti iš 2-3 metų laikotarpio, apimančio dabartinius karo laikus Ukrainoje, aborto teisę JAV ir prezidento rinkimus Lietuvoje ir JAV.

Šio tyrimo objektas – moterų politikų vaizdavimas žiniasklaidos diskurse. Tyrimo tikslas – išanalizuoti, kaip žiniasklaidos (politiniame) diskurse yra reprezentuojamos moterys lyderės ir kaip ideologiškai yra perteikiama lyties stereotipų dilema. Užsibrėžtam tikslui pasiekti buvo iškelti šie tyrimo tikslai: (1) išanalizuoti, kaip politikės yra vaizduojamos žiniasklaidos politiniame diskurse, (2) nustatyti pasikartojančias temas, susijusias su moterimis lyderėmis, (3) iširti, kaip lyčių stereotipai (dvigubi standartai) yra vaizduojami diskurse, (4) apžvelgti metaforos vaidmenį lyčių stereotipų dilemos reprezentacijoje, (5) palyginti pasikartojančius panašumus ir skirtumus duomenų visumoje.

Tyrimo metu nustatyta, kad politikės žiniasklaidoje buvo paminėtos 922 kartus. Temos, kurios buvo siejamos su moterimis politikėmis, apėmė karo, aborto teisių, rinkimų, įvairių vizitų temas. Žiniasklaidos šaltinio politinės pažiūros, taip pat, aktyvus ar pasyvus politikės vaidmuo politikoje turėjo įtakos moterų politikų reprezentacijai. Be to, buvo tiriama metaforiniai posakiai, kuriais buvo apibūdinamos politinės lyderės. Labiausiai paplitę metaforų domenai iš abiejų šalių žiniasklaidos buvo sugrupuoti pagal jų panašumus, šaltinio domenų grupes sudarė: KARAS IR GRĖSMĖ, KŪNAS IR JUDĖJIMAS, GAMTA IR KELIONĖ, ASMENINIAI SANTYKIAI IR MAISTAS.
